INTRODUCTION.

ὅταν εὖρης λόγον τοῦ ἁγίου Ἀθανασίου, καὶ μὴ ἔχεις χαρτίᾱ, εἰς τὰ ἱμάτιά σου γράψον αὐτόν.

JOH. MOSCHUS, Pratum, XL.

In the Introduction to his translation of Athanasius' Festal Letters, Larsow writes<sup>1</sup>: 'What could call forth more admiration, what attract more attention among theological students than the discovery of a work, lost indeed in the Greek original but preserved in a Syriac version, by the illustrious man whom the Church of all ages has most justly honoured as 'the Great', 'the Apostolic'?' Similar expressions would fittingly introduce the work published for the first time in the following pages — should its authenticity be satisfactorily demonstrated. Scepticism however is here inevitable; for the sole European who has hitherto perused it regards this work with suspicion. E. Renaudot, the learned Oratorian of Jansenist sympathies, well known as the editor of the Liturgiarum Orientalium Collectio and as collaborator in the Perpétuité de la Foi, gives, in his Historia Patriarcharum Alexandrinorum Jacobitarum,<sup>2</sup> certain information regarding the canon-law of the Alexandrine church<sup>3</sup> and, while narrating the history of Athanasius, takes occasion to make the following observations (p. 97): Habent (Arabes) canones Athanasii nomine, numero centum et septem, qui exstant in amplissima collectione Coptitarum Jacobitarum, in antiquo codice bibliothecæ Seguerianæ et in alio quem Wanslebius, dum in Aegypto esset, describi curaverat, qui exstat in bibliotheca oratoriana. Eos autem canones Coptitis notissimos fuisse argumento est testimonium Ebnassali, Echmimensis, Abulbirkat et aliorum, qui eos in locos communes degesserunt aut sicut is, quem ultimo loco nominavimus, in compendium redegerunt. Exstant quoque alia ex iis testimonia in variis collectionibus quaestionibusque et responsionibus. Non reperiuntur illi in collectione Melchitarum, cujus habentur antiquissima exemplaria. Inde facile conjectura duci potest eam quæ Athanasii nomine exstat apud Aegyptios Jacobitas non tam acceptam esse ex Græcis codicibus, quam ex usu ecclesiarum quotidiano in literas relatum sumptis hinc atque inde canonibus datumque illi collectioni titulum quo major illi accederet auctoritas. Sunt porro inter illos multi qui aetati Athanasii convenire non possunt et posterioris temporis disciplinam repræsentent; atque inde conjectura duci potest, Athanasio canones illos ascribi, quod Alexandrinæ ecclesiæ mores et instituta spectarent.

Since Renaudot no one appears to have read these canons, probably owing to this suspicion of spuriousness which might well act as a primary deterrent from any concern with the work. And of his predecessors, only Wansleben<sup>1</sup> gives the headings of our canons, and that not from a direct acquaintance with them, but from the account given by Abû 'I-Barakât. That learned Copt, in his catalogue of Christian-Arabic literature, observes with reference to Athanasius<sup>2</sup>: 'Moreover to him (Athanasius) are due 107 Canons, which he composed concerning the priesthood etc. A list of them has already been given in the chapter treating of the lists of the canons.' By the last words the writer refers to the 5th chapter of his theological Encyclopedia, which contains a 'List of the Canons ordained by the Fathers, the saintly Apostles and the holy Patriarchs and Bishops who came after them and were assembled in the recognized Synods'.<sup>1</sup> There, under the heading: 'The Canons of Abba Athanasius the Apostolic, 20th Patriarch of Alexandria — in number 107 Canons', Abû 'l-Barakât gives<sup>2</sup> a full and accurate list of the contents of the work,<sup>3</sup> concluding with the following note: 'In the MS. here used it is stated that, in the MS. whence it was transcribed, the statement is found that this holy Canon of Saint Athanasius, the great teacher of the land of the Egyptians, was one canon. But I, poor Michael, who am not worthy to be bishop of Tinnîs, held it right, when copying (or translating) it, to examine it and divide it into 107 sections, so that each section should clearly show its contents and that all who seek (therein) anything should easily and conveniently find it'.<sup>4</sup> This Michael is presumably identical with the continuator of Severus's Patriarchal History, completed in 1051<sup>5</sup> and utilized by Renaudot for the period subsequent to 880.<sup>6</sup> He had been ordained deacon by the patriarch Zacharias (1004—1032), priest by Sinuthius<sup>7</sup> (1032—1046), whom he had served as secretary, and was nominated bishop of Tinnîs by Christodulus (1047—1077), who had already employed him as envoy to John of Antioch.<sup>8</sup> It is probably to him then that we owe the Arabic version of our canons.

This Arabic translation is preserved in the following collections of the Canons of the Coptic church:

1. In that of the priest Macarius, who lived in the monastery of Abû Yuhannes the Short, in the Scetic desert, about the year 1350 (v. KRQ. 127). The MSS. of this work now in Europe are enumerated l. c., 122 ff.
2. In the Berlin MS. of AD. 1338 (= R; v. KRQ. 129 ff.), a collection of canons related to that of Macarius.
3. In a collection in Paris, Bibliothèque Nationale (Catal. no. 138, v. KRQ. 136), related to nos. 1 and 2.
4. In the collection put together by J. S. Assemani, mainly on the basis of that of Macarius (v. KRQ. 153, no. 33).

In the Melkite collections, on the other hand, the Athanasian Canons are wanting (l. c., §§ 10, 11, p. 138 ff.).

Further, excerpts from them are embodied in certain Nomocanons: in two Arabic-Ethiopic Penitentials (v. Appendix A); and in the canonical collection of Farag Allâh of Achmîm.<sup>1</sup> On the other hand, they are wanting (pace Renaudot) in Ibn al-<sup>c</sup>Assâl's Canon Law (better known in its Ethiopic form as the Fetha Nagast<sup>2</sup>), as also in the Nomocanon of Michael of Damietta.<sup>3</sup>

We are however taken back considerably further than the 11th century Arabic translation by the remains of the Coptic, whence the Arabic is derived. The London papyrus (B) belongs, in Mr. Crum's opinion, to the 6th or 7th century; and, since the Coptic text is without doubt itself but a translation, the Greek original of the canons would date at any rate from the 6th century.

For further conclusions as to their provenance we are dependent upon the internal evidence of the canons. It is important here to notice that, in regard to form, they are comparable neither with the Apostolic Canons, the synodal decrees of the 4th century, nor with the Canons of Timothy of Alexandria.<sup>1</sup> They consist, not — as the subsequent Arabic distribution into sections might easily lead us to expect — of brief, judicially conceived paragraphs, but for the most part of lengthy disquisitions on the importance and sanctity of the priestly office, frequently interspersed with dogmatical or exegetical comments, sometimes too with narratives of the writer's own experiences. By the concluding words the writer (or a later continuator) wishes apparently to indicate the arrangement of the work (p. 67, § 105): 'This whole writing doth consist of three chief parts, whereof the first treateth of the fear of God and of the altar, the second of compassion toward the poor, and the third of the keeping of virginity. Whoso etc.' (v. p. 67). The first 81 §§ then might be referred to verecundia, §§ 82—91 to miseri-cordia, §§ 92—104 to castitas. But such a division presents difficulties, and it is possible that the passage cited does not refer to the arrangement of the work, but is intended as a development of § 104, wherein the author had exhorted to the observation of 'all His (God's) commandments and all the words that are written in this book of the church's law', to which he then adds the observation that the contents of these numerous injunctions may be gathered under three main ideas: reverence for the sanctuary, charity and purity. Yet even thus an indication as to the arrangement of the whole work would be afforded; for these are, in fact, the principal conceptions which, whether in homiletic or ascetic disquisitions or in separate rules, are here applied to the concrete relationships of Christian life.

The author is without doubt a cleric, since he addresses the clergy as his 'brethren'. He is a bishop, and even appears to stand in an authoritative relation towards other bishops; for he gives them both instruction and commands (e.g. §§ 14, 16, 18, 54, 61, 62, 66, 76, 82, 104). We may therefore see in him either a metropolitan, archbishop or patriarch. He is a learned theologian with an extraordinary familiarity with Scripture; Chronicles and Zechariah come as readily to him as the Gospels.

Furthermore, he is an Egyptian. The argument for localizing the work in Egypt is based primarily on the history of its preservation — in Egypt alone are we able to trace it — but also by various subordinate features. The months which occur are called by their Egyptian names, e.g. Tûbah, Barmûdah. The feast of the Epiphany, in the month of Tûbah, is termed the feast of the New Year, coincident with the harvest of grain and fruit: "The last of all fruits is the olive, which men gather upon this day; wherefore this is called by the Egyptians the feast of the New Year." <sup>1</sup> To Egypt moreover points the fact that the Epistle to the Hebrews is cited as a work of St. Paul. <sup>2</sup> The references too to the property of the church and to its fellahîn point to Egypt; nor does that to vine cultivation (f. 112a) in any way contradict this. For, although wine is not today produced in Egypt, it was still an important industry in the Christian period, as may be seen from innumerable references throughout the private documents (papyri, ostraca <sup>3</sup>), and from some also in literary texts. <sup>4</sup>

Thus an Egyptian provenance may be regarded as certain. Yet the writer was no Egyptian in the narrower sense of that name. He shows the influence of Greek upbringing and Greek ideas and speaks of 'barbarians' in contemptuous terms

<sup>2</sup> "The Alexandrine church has, from time immemorial, read the Ep. to the Hebrews as a genuine work of Paul, together with his other Epistles" (Th. Zahn in PRE,<sup>3</sup> IX. 775). Cf. also Athanasius in the 39th Festal Letter (Migne, PG. 26. 1177).

(ff. 102 a, 116 b). Presumably therefore he is an Alexandrine.

When then did the Egyptian archbishop, or possibly Alexandrine patriarch, who composed this work, live? We saw that the remains of the Coptic version take us back to the 7th century, so that we must seek the Greek original at any rate in the 6th. The whole character of the work forbids us to think of a later period. The writer is acquainted with many pagans (§ 95), he speaks of the charismatic gift as of something still familiar<sup>1</sup> (§ 52), he knows the festivals of Easter, Pentecost, Epiphany (or the New Year), but ignores that of Christmas (f. 103 b)<sup>2</sup>. Nor does he anywhere quote, as on numerous occasions he might have done, the earlier documents of church law. A terminus ad quem having thus been proposed, we must seek the superior limit certainly not beyond the 4th century. The Egyptian church, as conceived by our author, is no longer a state-persecuted body; it is the church of the state. The writer feels himself to be a member of the Roman empire when he speaks of the duty of the king to protect his territory against the attacks of the barbarians (f. 102 a); he appeals to the civil law in describing the duties of the bishop towards the poor at the three great festivals and towards those in distress whom he must visit and assist: 'for the laws (νόμοι) of the kings do teach us how we must conform ourselves to God's benevolence and refresh all them that are in need.' I have failed to find the passage to which this refers, but the assumption is at any rate made that the Roman emperor issues edicts to the bishops. In accord with this we find that one who robs a church is handed over for punishment to the civil power (§ 90 end, f. 117 b). This last incident is stated by the author to have actually befallen 'when he himself was still a youth', and we are thus obliged to place the composition at least thirty years later than the establishment of the state church by Constantine. These various considerations may lead us to decide with some assurance upon the period between 350 and 500.

<sup>1</sup> As in the case of Pachomius (Grützmacher, Pachomius 1896, 69), whom, although he refused episcopal orders, Athanasius had revered quite in the spirit of our 52d Canon. A century later, however, Shenoute appears to hesitate to claim such gifts (Leipoldt, Shenoute 53 ff.).

Now Arabic literary tradition of the 11th century ascribes the work to the patriarch Athanasius the Great, who was born about 293, who while still very young served 6 years as a reader (ca. 309—315), who at the outbreak of the Arian controversy (ca. 318) was a deacon (i. e. aet. 25), and in 326 was ordained bishop of Alexandria, which office he held, with the interruption of five exiles (335—37, 339—46, 356—62, 362—64, 365—66), until 373. Seeing that the contents of the work before us presuppose a definite period of peace in the church, we should be obliged, were Athanasius the author, to consider either the period 346—56 or 366—73, and, for preference, the latter of these.

Is it then possible that Athanasius should have composed this work, about the year 370? The silence of Greek writers as regards a work of Athanasius referring specially to Egyptian conditions, is conceivable. But it is remarkable that Severus of Ashmunain, in his chronicle of the Alexandrine bishops, although he gives a list of the writings of Athanasius presumably from Coptic sources, makes no mention of canons.<sup>1</sup> Still more suspicious is the circumstance that the canons of Timothy of Alexandria (Migne, PG. XXXIII) are current in the Armenian church under the name of 'Canons of Athanasius';<sup>2</sup> and moreover that a number of spurious writings besides pass under his name. It would seem not impossible that the present work may owe the name of Athanasius merely to the imagination of its Arabic translator, Michael; the extant Coptic fragments at any rate preserve no author's name. Further, Renaudot calls attention to certain internal difficulties: sunt inter illos canones multi (which?) qui aetati Athanasii convenire non possunt et posterioris temporis disciplinam repraesentant. Yet there are, on the other hand, passages in the work which appear to point both to this period and to Athanasius as their author. We may draw attention to the following points:

1. The writer's interest in distinguishing between the canonical and apocryphal books, which characterized Athanasius; cf. his Festal Letter of 367.<sup>1</sup> 'The Reader shall read nought save the catholic word, lest the people mock at the lying words of the abolished (apocryphal) writings, which be not of the spirit of God, but of the world' — so says § 11 (f. 102 b). By a slight alteration in one Arabic letter the reading 'catholic word' could be replaced by 'canonical word'. But even if the traditional reading be retained, the idea is in perfect agreement with those expressed in the above-named Festal Letter: καὶ ὅμως, ἀγαπητοί, κἀκείνων κανονιζομένων, καὶ τούτων ἀναγιγνωσκομένων, οὐδαμοῦ τῶν ἀποκρύφων μνήμη· ἀλλὰ αἰρετικῶν ἐστὶν ἐπινοία, γραφόντων μὲν ὅτε θέλουσιν αὐτά. And again in § 18 (f. 104 b): 'The Bishop shall prove the Reader often and the Singers, lest they read any but the common, catholic books, whence all the people do learn the great and merciful work of God.' It is to be observed here how, in both instances, 'canonical' and 'catholic', 'apocryphal' and 'heretical' are coupled together.

2. Still more remarkable is the twice repeated reference to Meletius. In § 12: 'The singers shall not sing the writings of Meletius and of the ignorant, which sing without wisdom, not as David and in the Holy Spirit, but like the songs of the heathen, whose mouths ought to be stopped.'<sup>2</sup> But if they sing not in the Holy Spirit, then let them sing not at all. It is written: 'Ye shall not add aught thereunto neither take aught thence.'<sup>1</sup> And § 25 enumerates, among those who are to be carefully excluded from the sacrament, all sorts of magicians and also all such as say 'that Meletius hath (or the Meletians have) a church.... For had they been ours, they had remained with us<sup>2</sup> and had not risen against the Lord, nor had separated themselves from His church. And how can there be two churches, seeing the apostle Paul saith<sup>3</sup> that the church is one?'

This last paragraph, in thus fixing the limits of the sacramental community, treats heathen and heretics as ipso facto excluded and does not so much as mention them. Those alone are named about whom there might exist a doubt; those, that is, who either are or at any rate declare themselves to be or are regarded by others as being, members of the church. Of the first of these, the author names such as practise any form of superstition — a class very largely represented in Egypt; of the second, the members of the schismatical church of Meletius. The latter are not to be treated as members of the catholic church; for they are schismatics, maintaining that Meletius has a church, in other words, that there are two churches, while in truth there is but one. Now these Meletians aim at fellowship with the catholics; but this is to be refused until they shall forsake the community of Meletius and confess one catholic church. Furthermore we learn that in the Meletian church hymns were sung which had perhaps been composed by members of that body. The intrusion of hymns thus emanating from schismatics into the service of the catholic church must be prevented and with this object a general injunction is issued against the use of any liturgical songs beyond the biblical Psalms.

Of the Meletian schism we know, it is true, very little; that little however is in complete accordance with what we learn from our Canons.<sup>1</sup> Meletius or Melitius, bishop of Lycopolis, was excommunicated in 311, by Peter of Alexandria. 'But Meletius', says Athanasius,<sup>2</sup> 'appealed not unto another synod, neither did he seek to defend himself, but rather was the cause of a schism and his companions are up till now called not Christians but Meletians.' For Athanasius, then, he was not a heretic but a schismatic, 'who had rent asunder the seamless robe of Christ,'<sup>3</sup> and whose adherents, the Meletians, nevertheless 'boast that they have received that which belongeth not unto them, namely, that they also were reckoned of the catholic church.'<sup>4</sup> For, as Epiphanius<sup>5</sup> relates, a difference of opinion had arisen between archbishop Peter and Meletius regarding the treatment of the lapsi, and, in the course of this dispute, Peter had had his deacon announce that whoso was of his opinion should come to him, but that those who agreed with Meletius should join him. From thenceforth each party had refused to the other communion both in prayer and sacrament. Meletius appointed separate bishops, priests and deacons and set up his own churches, even in Alexandria itself. To put an end to this schism, the synod of Nicaea had decided that the adherents of Meletius should be readmitted into the catholic church. Yet Athanasius wished 'that that decision had never been taken at Nicaea.'<sup>6</sup> The hostility between the two parties continued; Meletians and Arians made common cause, and, at the synod of Tyre (335), brought about the deposition of Athanasius. Thus we may understand how, about 350, the Meletians, rather than the Arians, appear as the true enemies of the catholic church in Egypt.<sup>1</sup> In later times we learn that the sect was still in existence in Egypt in the middle of the 5th century.<sup>2</sup> Further, Theodoret states<sup>3</sup> that the Meletian monks had adopted various superstitious practises, Jewish ablutions and the like. Possibly the mention in our canons of the Meletians, directly after fortune-tellers and magicians, may have some reference to this; while the statement of the canons, that the Meletians sang in their services newly composed Psalms, may be connected with their eventual union with the Arians and the identification<sup>4</sup> of the two parties in the popular mind; for Arius had notoriously sought to propagate his doctrines by means of popular songs.<sup>5</sup> Still more striking is the strict exclusion enjoined by our canons of Meletians from the catholic services, when we recall the refusal to them of communion by the archbishops Peter and Athanasius.

In short, the brief phrases wherein Meletius is here mentioned are perfectly comprehensible as ordinances issued by Athanasius in the years 366—73. And it may be finally observed that the singing of new psalms is here forbidden in the very words of Deuteronomy which Athanasius quotes in reference to the biblical canon:<sup>6</sup> Μηδεὶς αὐτοῖς ἐπιβαλλέτω, μηδὲ τούτων ἀφαιρέσθω τι.

3. A third point which may lend support to the Athanasian authorship of the present work is its relation towards monasticism. In these ecclesiastical canons there is naturally <sup>1</sup> Larsow 80, 84, 127, Grützmacher Pachomius 74. The Meletians attempt to win Pachomius for their party, but he is referred by a vision to Alexander of Alexandria as the true orthodox bishop.

<sup>2</sup> Socr., HE. I. 9, Theod., HE. I. 9. In Shenoute's time they had become unimportant. [They seem to have existed in the 6th cent., v. Rev. des Et. grecq. III, 134 and even in the 8th, v. Renaudot, Hist. 230 W. E. C.].

<sup>5</sup> Cf. PRE.<sup>3</sup> II. 13. The condemnation of ἰδιωτικοὶ ψαλλοί is however found also in Can. Laod. 59 and Can. Basil. § 97 (KRQ. 274).

no special treatment of monasticism beyond that of the relations between the sacerdotal church and the monks. Thus, for example, in § 48, no priest is allowed to enter a virgins' monastery, unless he be of advanced age. As, for reasons of expediency, access to the nunnery is thus made difficult, so on the other hand monks and nuns are forbidden to frequent certain liturgical functions. We can learn, from Can. Laod. 9, Gangr. 20, of the annually recurrent festivals of the martyrs which took place in chapels dedicated especially to them. From the latter of these canons we moreover gather that such celebrations were by many denounced, clearly on account of the abuses to which they frequently gave occasion.<sup>1</sup> Such festivals took place usually at night and appear to have acquired the character of public holidays with which secular entertainments were combined; hence in § 92 attendance at them is forbidden to monks and nuns, who are rather at these times to hold a solemn festival in their monasteries. When going to divine service, nuns are enjoined to walk by twos, and under the eye of the 'mother', i. e. the prioress. If a father should desire to visit his daughter in a monastery, he must have recourse to the 'mother's' intervention. Virgins of both sexes are to fast strictly and may not eat anything whence blood has gone forth, neither drink any wine (§ 98), excepting in cases of illness (§ 92).<sup>2</sup> Not however in monasteries alone is the virgin, as a distinct order, to be sought; she is found besides in the family itself.<sup>3</sup> In every Christian household there is to be a virgin; for one virgin is the salvation of the whole house (§§ 98, 104). But these virgins may not be treated as slaves or servants (§ 103); such treatment would be a contempt of their estate and σχημα. Parents may give their children to the Lord in youth (§ 97), provided the latter show an inclination in that direction.<sup>1</sup> Virgins of this class do not celebrate the feasts of the martyrs with the community generally, but apart, in the convent and under the supervision of the abbess. The convent serves indeed as a place of contemplative retreat for women generally. Thus it was customary, for example, to pray for the departed on the 40th day after death, because it was held that on that day 'the soul of the departed appears before Christ and is requited according to the merit of his deeds.'<sup>2</sup> Many used therefore to pass this night in prayer at the graves of their relatives. Nevertheless the Council of Elvira (AD. 306), in its 35th canon, ordained: Placuit prohiberi ne foeminae in coemeterio pervigilent, eo quod saepe sub obtentu orationis latenter scelera committunt. The custom was however so firmly rooted, that compensative measures had to be devised and thus our 99th canon rules that women who may desire to offer prayers for the soul of a son or husband shall repair to a virgins' convent and there, in company with the nuns, pass the night in prayer, 'lest any soul should suffer hurt.'<sup>3</sup> For their services the nuns are to receive remuneration. On the other hand, there is a general prohibition to nuns against attending any festivity, whether of joy or mourning, at the houses of their relatives. Permission to do so is granted only as an exception, and then in company with the prioress. Nuns however, like monks, receive their due share of inherited property (§ 102).

Is it possible that these regulations are to be ascribed to Athanasius, in about the years 366—373? His interest in monasticism is well known. 'The father of orthodoxy, he is besides the first episcopal patron of monasticism.'<sup>1</sup> He had narrated the life of Anthony († 356), had maintained close relations with Pachomius († 346), the founder, in 322, of the first monastery, and, in the years of his persecution, had sought refuge with the monks of the desert. It should not surprise us therefore to find points of striking resemblance between a work likewise ascribed to Athanasius, the De Virginitate sive de Ascesi,<sup>2</sup> and the present canons. As early as Erasmus that tract was indeed declared to be spurious; but Eichhorn has produced in its defence weighty arguments, with which I am myself inclined to agree.<sup>3</sup> Moreover, what we know of the Pachomian monks accords well with our canons. During her brother's life (i.e. before 346) Maria, the sister of Pachomius, had established a convent wherein dwelt four hundred nuns. We learn from the rules there observed that, if a monk desired to visit a nun, the superintendant of the convent, as well as another nun, had to be present at the interview,<sup>4</sup> just as in canon 92. The care of souls among the nuns is entrusted to an aged man,<sup>5</sup> as in canon 48. Since the Pachomian monks wore a peculiar dress,<sup>6</sup> so too the nuns would be already distinctively clothed, as is taken for granted in our canons.<sup>7</sup> The Pachomian rule again permitted its monks to receive the visits of their relatives, though not too often, and also, in cases of death, to obtain the director's leave to accompany the funeral, exactly as in the canons.<sup>8</sup> According to the Antonian regulations the monks were obliged to fast daily until the 9th hour: so too in our canons. Thus all the rules regarding monastic life, which are to be presumed from these canons agree with what is known as to the regulations of the cloister in Egypt in the year 350.<sup>1</sup>

Again, a strong argument for the high antiquity of the work is offered by the fact that the authority of earlier canonical writings is nowhere cited. Neither the Apostolic Canons nor those of Nicaea or of any other synod are ever mentioned. It is indeed said, in § 5 (f. 97 b), that the minister of the altar must walk in the canons of the Apostles, and in § 9, that it is not of the church's canons to use false weights and measures. Yet neither of these ordinances is supported by quotations from the so-called Canons of the Apostles or from those of a synod, but rather by biblical texts — the second by 1 Pet. V. 2, the first by a reference to the Pastoral Epistles. Athanasius too employs the terms ἐκκλησιαστικοὶ κανόνες (Migne, P'G. 25, 224 D), 'Apostolic tradition' (Larsow, p. 69), 'canon of monasticism' (P'G. 28, 268 C) in this sense.<sup>2</sup> The sole quotation from a work of ecclesiastical law which our canons show relates to an imperial edict (f. 104 a, v. p. XI above).

But beyond this, resemblances may be found, in the first place, with the canons of Laodicea (e. g. f. 102 b), which date from the 2nd half of the fourth century. Should it be sought to demonstrate a dependence here of one from the other — a condition which I hold to be unlikely — it is in our canons that the elder form would have to be recognized; and thus the view of Boudinhon, that the Laodicean canons are a compilation from canons of the 4th century,<sup>3</sup> would receive support. Further, attention has been drawn in the notes to the frequent resemblances to the copto-arabic canons of Basil, while, on the other hand, we observe a slight divergence from those of Nicaea. The latter ordain

(can. 5) that, in each province, synods shall be held twice a year, the first before Quadragesima, the second in the autumn.<sup>1</sup> Similarly the 20th canon of Antioch ordains that the metropolitan must assemble the bishops of his eparchy for a synod twice yearly, while the 38th canon of the Apostles makes almost the same rule. Our 68th canon, on the other hand, requires that all the clergy of an Egyptian νομός shall meet their bishop thrice a year — the νομός was, it is true, but a small district.

Again, a point of contact with the Hippolytan Canons may be mentioned. The § 80 treats of the sick who dwell in the sanctuary. If they be poor, the steward must provide for them, while for such as sleep in the church he shall care as for his children, giving heed to them as unto the vessels of the church, and so forth (v. p. 49). Now in the 24th Hippolytan canon<sup>2</sup> we read: ‘With the bishop there shall always be a deacon, to give him information as to the doings of all, especially as to one that is sick, that he may be aware thereof. For the sick it is of importance that the chief-priest visit him . . . . But the sick shall not be suffered to sleep in the κοιμητήριον, except those that are poor. Wherefore shall he that hath a house not be borne into the house of God, except it be to pray, and thereafter he shall be carried again unto his house. The steward that hath the care of the sick shall cause the bishop to bear the cost of them, even unto the earthen vessels, because the sick have need thereof. Let the bishop give the same unto the steward.’ The requirement here of the Hippolytan canon appears to me to be the later in date; for while the Athanasian canon assumes that the sick of all classes sleep within the church, there to be healed, that of Hippolytus restricts this usage to the poor, who are without provision at home.

These rules are at the same time evidence of the extent of the church's economic activities. As regards the structure of the church, we learn that, in order to reach the real interior of the building, two doors had to be passed; the outer of them guarded by the θυρωροί, the inner by the deacons (§ 25). In the intervening space stood the catechumens (§ 25, f. 105 a), besides such heretics and schismatics as desired to be present at the service. The ecclesiastical orders are here seen in their full development of seven successive grades: bishop, presbyter, deacon, subdeacon, reader, psalmist and doorkeeper, just as in the Laodicean canons, §§ 21—24, and the Concil. Quinisextum, § 4. Their sevenfold division the writer supports from various biblical passages (f. 101 a); possibly therefore this arrangement had not, at the time, attained the position of a generally recognized doctrine.<sup>1</sup>

The clergy wear a peculiar garb (f. 105 b), which is kept in a special room, together with the rest of the church furniture (§ 28).<sup>2</sup> This room is apparently identical with that wherein the tithes of the harvest etc. are stored. The management of the church's property is the duty of the steward (οἰκονόμος) who plays an important part in our canons.<sup>3</sup> Where more than one steward is required, these have at their head the οἰκονόμος μέγας, the colleague of the bishop. Single churches have their own husbandmen (fellahîn), who till the land with hired labourers. Such detailed instructions as to the management of ecclesiastical property, suggesting as they do comparisons with Can. Antioch. 24, 25, Gangra 7, 8, Apost. 39, 40, are especially interesting. And it may be here observed that, to judge by the Egyptian ostraca, <sup>1</sup> The catholic church, though recognizing 7 orders, counts them differently (v. Wetzer-Welte IX, 1032, Kraus, Realenc. II, 555). I have failed to find any testimony regarding the antiquity of the number. Harnack (Urspr. d. niederen Weihen, TU. II. IV, 100) appears to regard the eight orders as the older number; but in this he can scarcely be correct.

the economy of the Christian church would seem to have imitated that of the heathen temples. For, according to these texts, the landowner was called upon to pay, beyond the land and poll taxes, a contribution towards the temple of his district; and so, as well as the state dues, we read of the collection of the 'sacred barley' and 'sacred wheat', a hundredth part of the total harvest. The corresponding duty upon vines and fruit-plantations amounted to a sixth of the whole, and so on. But the question can not be further followed out here. We were only concerned to show that the regulations of our canons are not in contradiction to the conditions of the age of Athanasius; and this point may, I think, be held sufficiently demonstrated. Nor will any one contend that church legislation was a field beyond the province of Athanasius.<sup>1</sup>

Finally, it would be difficult to discover a closer resemblance to the style of our canons than in that of the Festal Letters of Athanasius (e. g., here p. 67, compared with the close of the 1st Letter).

Now the Chronicle of John of Nikiu<sup>2</sup> records that Athanasius, on his recall from his fourth exile (364), assembled a synod of all bishops and teachers and composed two tracts,<sup>3</sup> one upon the Logos and the Trinity, the other upon the 'Commandments of Christ'.<sup>4</sup> Of the second of these Zotenberg states that it is otherwise unknown. The 'Commandments' might, for two reasons, be identified with our canons: (1) because the latter begin with the words, 'These are the <sup>1</sup> Perhaps Can. Basil. 31 (KRQ. 249) refers to an Athanasian work of this nature. [On the other hand, the Athanasian works cited by Can. 2 of the Trullan Synod (692) among the canons of the fathers still in force, are doubtless those included likewise in the collections of Balsamon and Zonaras (Migne, PG. 138, 545 ff.), viz. the Epistles to Amon and Rufinian and a passage from the 39th Festal Letter (cf. Th. laws', and (2) because the date given in the Chronicle agrees fairly with that at which we have arrived. To me, then, it appears not impossible that these canons are, as a whole, derived from a work of Athanasius. Not, of course, that every phrase of the Arabic version is to be claimed as Athanasian; a comparison with the Coptic fragments shows how great is the freedom of much of the Arabic translation.<sup>1</sup> Moreover the impression is often given of confusion in the text,<sup>2</sup> and the conclusion, from § 105 onwards, has almost the appearance of a subsequent addition.

It remains to say something as to the plan followed in the present edition of the Arabic version. It is based upon the translation contained in the MS. Diez, qu. 107, of the Royal Library at Berlin (= R; cf. KRQ. 129—135), which is described as followed by Ahlwardt (Katal. IX. 539, No. 10181): '219 foll., 4°, 19 (20) ll., (26 × 16½; 19—20 × 12½ cm.; from f. 51 onwards 18—19 × 11½ cm.). — Condition: in general fairly good, though somewhat dirty and spotted, with water stains in the margins of the first third. A certain number of worm holes. — Paper: yellow, thick and smooth. — Binding: brown leather with fastening . . . . No. 11. — ff. 94—122a. Title: قوانين القديس اثناسيوس الرسولي بطريرك الاسكندرية بركنه معنا. The Canons of Athanasius of Alexandria, 107 in number. — Script: rather large, good, regular, fully vocalized, although diacritical points are sometimes wanting. Titles in red. The copy dates from AM. 1055 = AH. 739 = AD. 1338. According to f. 108 one fol. is wanting.<sup>3</sup> Fol. 122b is blank.'

This manuscript is well fitted to serve as the foundation of the text, being not only the oldest but being moreover very carefully written.<sup>1</sup> To follow its orthographic peculiarities, is, I believe, to contribute something to the needs of Arabic philology. The Arabic employed in this version is not of the classical idiom; it would therefore be a fundamental error to treat such a text from the classical standpoint and to correct it in accordance with Wright's grammar. Neither can the classical rules as to orthography be here observed; to do so would be to give our Canons a linguistic form which in reality was never theirs. The Arabic dialects moreover are today zealously studied, and to many therefore the exact idiomatic and orthographic forms of the oldest begins with § 57, thus omitting §§ 55, 56. Yet there is no evidence of a missing leaf. The quire has, like all the rest, 10 leaves, and moreover, the old Coptic pagination is continued without interruption. §§ 55, 56 must therefore either have been absent in the MS. copied or must have been omitted through the scribe's carelessness.

And this (befell) on the 8th of the month Amshir, year 1055 of the pure Martyrs, which corresponds in the blessed Arabic months (lit. month) to the 21st of the simple month Ragab of the year 739 of the Hijra. And praise be to God for ever and ever. Both the above dates correspond to Febr. 2, 1339.

manuscript will be not unwelcome. A certain arbitrariness in the treatment of the text was, it is true, unavoidable; I have, for example, generally corrected such faults of the scribe as ص for ظ; but the MS. is responsible for inconsistencies such as the addition or omission of the hamza (هولاء) and هولای, (دایم and دائم, هولای), the forms ون and ین as the plural of nouns, or e. g. یسکتون and یسکتوا of verbs; further, مدینة and فصح and فصح, رتل and رثل, دام and دام, مدینة and مدینة.

The Berlin MS. was collated throughout with photographs of two MSS. of the Macarius text, viz.

1. Cod. Vatic. CXLIX, CL (v. Mai, Scr. Vet. Nov. Coll. IV. 275), a paper volume, of 178 foll. The subscription, fol. 86 (lege 80), is given as: Absolutus est liber hic benedictus, qui complectitur omnes sacros ecclesiae canones, mense emscir (februario) anno ss. martyrum millesimo octogesimo octavo (Christi 1372), quorum benedictiones Deus nobis impertiatur. Amen.

2. Cod. Paris., no. 251 in De Slane's Catalogue, where it is described as follows: 'A collection of canons, brought together by Maquâra (مقارة), a priest of the monastery of St. John the Dwarf, which is situated in the desert of Scete (شبهات). He extracted his documents from a large number of books found, either in the desert monasteries or at Cairo. After several years of laborious work, the collection, of which the present MS. is an exact copy, was completed. It contains the following pieces:

'.... 40. (ff. 323—339).—Canons of the Church, set in order by St. Athanasius, patriarch of Alexandria, and numbering 107. At the end of the work, Michael bishop of Tennes (تنیس) informs us that he had rearranged these canons in a more convenient order.....'

'Paper; 336 foll. Height  $34\frac{1}{2}$  cm., width 25 cm.; lines in a page, 24. The MS. is dated AM. 1069 = AD. 1353. (Supplément 83, Saint Germain 41).'

For the first 10 canons (ff. 323*a*—327*b*) I had the use of a copy made from this MS. by Mr. Crum; for the remainder (ff. 328*a*—338*b*) I used photographs taken by Mrs. Crum. This MS., as having been made directly from the author's copy, is our best authority for the Macarian collection. Besides it, a partial copy by Mr. Crum of a MS. of AD. 1680, now in the Bodleian (Hunt. 32), has been collated for §§ 59—61, 65—70, 73, 74. It is thus described by Uri in his catalogue (I, p. 40):

‘No. LXII. — Paper (bombycinus) codex, written by the same hand as the preceding.<sup>1</sup> Foll. 238. Contains the 2nd part of the Canons of the Alexandrine Church, consisting of ‘.... 13. Athanasius of Alexandria: 107 Canons.’

Finally, for §§ 55, 56, wanting in R, I used Mr. Crum's collations of the Paris MSS. no. 252 (De Slane p. 68), a copy made for Wansleben in 1664 (cf. KRQ. 122), and no. 238, probably part of a distinct collection of Alexandrine canons (cf. KRQ. 136).

Unanimous readings of these Macarian MSS. are in the following pages indicated by M, those peculiar to the Vatican,<sup>2</sup> Paris and Oxford (Bodleian) MSS. respectively by Mv, Mp, Mb.

I had originally noted in the margin all the variants of the MS. M. Subsequently, in order to reduce the cost of printing, but contrary to my own wish, I restricted these to a selection. The reader will however still find all variants of importance noted. As in the case of the Hippolytan Canons, I should have been glad to omit in the present edition the division into separate canons, an arrangement not merely in itself very recent — some 700 years later than the original composition — but detrimental to the literary form and not infrequently quite false, as, for example, between §§ 80 and 81, where a sentence is cut in half, and at the beginning of § 79, where the train of thought is completely ignored.<sup>1</sup> However I finally decided to acquiesce in the traditional arrangement; for it is in this form alone that the Arabic text has reached us and upon it too the description of Abû 'l-Barakât, and thence that of Wansleben, was based. The titles of the individual canons as given in the Berlin MS. are included in the notes. These are not to be found in the Macarian collection, nor do they agree at all with the headings given by Abû 'l-Barakât.<sup>2</sup> They would thus not be part even of the original Arabic translation. For this reason they are here relegated to the notes, where their retention may be justified on grounds of practical utility.

<sup>2</sup> It should be observed that this MS. was frequently corrected by its scribe in accordance with the rules of grammar: e. g. he read in the copy before him

هـن اَيْضًا يَنْتَرَكْنَ، والنسوة ۞ اَيْضًا يَنْتَرَكْنَ. I have for the most part ignored such variants.

The Arabic text was translated by me into German and thence into English by Mr. Crum.<sup>3</sup> The responsibility for the translation from the Arabic rests with me alone, although I have to thank Mr. Crum for many suggestions.

The notes in the lower margins fall into two groups. Those bearing letters refer to important textual variants, while those signed with figures relate to the subject-matter, biblical quotations or parallel passages from other ecclesiastical literature.

Of the Coptic fragments and their relation to the Arabic version Mr. Crum has given an account in a separate section.

قوانين  $b$  القديس الفاضل اتناسيوس الرسول بطريك الاسكندرية بركته
معنا امين وعدتهم مائة وسبعة قوانين بسلام الرب امين  $b$

هؤلاء  $\phi$  نواميس القسوس الذين يخدمون جيّدًا فلتضاعف لهم الكرامة
وبخاصّة الذين يتعبون في الكلام والتعليم لان من اجل الاساقفة انهم  $\epsilon$
لا يقاموا بشيء من الاشياء من اجل هذا  $e$  ينبغي ان يُكرّموا  $d$  بكل
كرامة الله لان موسى لما خدم المذبح باستحقاق انعم الله على وجهه
بالجمال اكثر من الكل هذا الذي جعله الله آية للذين يخدمون
المذبح جيّدًا بطهارة كمثلته لانه هو النفس الامين  $f$  التعب في الكلام
والتعليم ومقرّر الناموس لذلك الشعب العاصي ومحتمل ثقلهم  $g$  وتبكيتم  $10$
ونميمتم الذي بغير حشمة الذي كانوا ينمّوا على الرب بها واللعنات
التي كانوا يقولوها عليه الا  $h$  ان  $h$  هؤلاء جميعهم لم يصيروا له ثقل
من اجل بهاء المذبح الذي صار له خادما الذي  $i$  هو مثال  $i$  الكلمة

مناجل هذا تمجد أكثر من كل أحد لأنه ذاتي حلوة الله هو أول
من تكلم عن الكنيسة وصنعها كمثال القبيّة لتذكّر الكنيسة بالرسم
المحدود والقبيّة التي كانت تابعة له كمثال الكنيسة ولم يضعها وحدها
ولكن رسم فيها رسوم للخدمة المقدسة لكي يعلمنا خشية الله الخايطة
بالمذبح هذه التي لا نراها لأنه صنع جلاجل باستدارة جبة هرون

أخيه لكي إذا سمعوه السلاطين الذي * في الموضوع المقدس داخلا إلى R f. 94b
القبة يتنكبوا لئلا يموت لأن كل من يستعجى ويتقدم إلى المذبح وهو
غير حائظ فاموس الله يموت موتاً ردياً مثل بنى على كاهن الرب لأن
ليس أحد من الناس يخدم المذبح بنجس أو بتوان فيموت موتاً صالحاً
القانون الأول k

10

يقول أيضاً للكهنة القريبين من الرب فليتنظروا لئلا يهلك الرب قوماً
منهم لأن هذا قد لحق بنى هرون لما لم يتنظروا كوصيّة أخى أبيهم
بان يصنعوا كهنوتهم بخوف الله لأن موسى قال أنا خائف ومرتعذ لأن
هذا هو الموضوع الذي يقوم فيه الرب إذا يقول موسى اني اظهر لك في
ذلك الموضوع بين اجنحة الشاروبيم واخاطبك لانها كلمة خرجت من
فمه قائلاً لا يرى انسان وجهي فيعيبش وداود يعرف هذا ان قال
انت مخوف يا الله من الذي يستطيع يقف امامك ولم يستعجى
النبي داود ان يتقرب إلى الرب قط او يرفع ذبيحة مثل كاهن وقد
كان يشتهي كما يقول اني احببت مساكنك يا رب القوات ونفسي
اشتياقت إلى ديار الرب وكانت شهوته ان يقترب إلى المذبح ويصير
كاهناً افضل كثيراً من مجد ملكه لأنه لا ينبغي بالجملة ان يكونوا
جميع الناس يقتربوا إلى المذبح بامضاء فقط الآ الذي يختاره الرب

20

لهذا العمل وهذا يخدم بخوف ورعدة لان داود رأى شاول وقد
رفع قربان بغير ما هو عليه ولا طقسه اخذ لعنة عوضا من البركة
وصار في حزن قلب عظيم لان الله نزع منه مجده اذ استجرى
واقترب الى الموضع المقدس وهو علماني واخذ طقس الكاهن m * الامين R f. 95a

صمويل من اجل هذا نزع الله منه مملكته واعطاها لداود لانه مَجِدٌ 5
المذبح ورأى الهلاك الذي صنعه الله بعوزا لان عوزا مَدَّ يده بغير
طقسه ومسك تابوت عهد الرب من اجل ان العاجل للحامل للتابوت
اماله فمسكه عوزا ولذلك اهلكه الرب ومات للوقت قدام الرب ولما رآه
داود ضايق صدره وكان يشتهي ان يدخل بالتابوت الى بيته الا انه
لم يستجري قائلًا كيف وبأي نوع يدخل تابوت الرب الى منزلي 10
ودارًا لما قبل التابوت ففرغ مما يكون فقير وصار غني كما قيل ان
الرب بارك بيت دارا n الكلداني وجميع ما هو له لاجل تابوت الرب
لان من هو قط تقدم الى مذبح بقلعة خوف ونجا وعوزاء الملك هو
ايضا اشتهى شكل الكهنوت لانه شيء يشتهي بالحقيقة ولما ذا اذكر

R f. 95a * انسانا واحدا وحده انه قد تألم من قبل الروح القدس السنتين ربوة 15
الذين كانوا تابعين لموسى أليس قد مات اكثر من من اجل روح القدس
كما يقولوا بنو اسرائيل لموسى اننا قد صرنا قليل وهلكنا لان دائان
وابيروم الذين ابتلعتهم الارض ورجالهم انما حل بهم ذلك لانهم
اشتهوا مجد الكهنوت وقورح وجماعته وجميعهم كانوا ماتوا رجل
ماتوا في الغضب قدام الرب كما هو مكتوب ان الذي له يعطى 20
ويترك والذي ليس له الثقيل الذي معه يوخذ منه لان الله يريد
يعلمنا المخافة الكاينة في المذبح والمخافة الكاينة في جميع الاواني

الكنيسة في المذبح قال ان الرب كلم موسى واليعازر قايلا خذ النحاس
 R f. 95b الذي قدّموه قدام الرب من وسط الرجال المختارين * لانهم قد طهروا p
 بنفس خاطية قدّموها قدام الرب ٥

 فيها لانهم جعلوا مساكنهم بجانب مسكني وحايطهم قائم بيني وبينهم

 لكم بيوت تاكلوا فيها وتشربوا وقد طرحتكم بكنيسة الله وتفضلكون
 الذين ليس لهم ويقول الانجيل v المقدس v ايضا انه صنع مَحْصُرة من

 15 الرب كما يقول في ملاخيا النبي w السويل لمن يقول ان مايدة الرب
 نجسة كما يقول السويل لكم ايها الكتبة والفريسيون لانكم تقولون ان
 من يحلف بالهيكل والمذبح فليس شيء والذي يحلف بذهب الهيكل
 والقربان الذي على المذبح يلزمه فلان الهيكل والمذبح المقدس لا يجب
 لاحد من الناس ان يقرب اليهما الا الذين ينتظرون كمثال الموضع

ARABIC TEXT.

In the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost, One God. a R f. 94<sup>a</sup>

The Canons of the holy, excellent Athanasius, the apostolic, Patriarch of Alexandria. May his blessing be with us. Amen. And their number is 107 Canons. In the peace of the Lord. Amen. b

These are the laws of the presbyters. 'Let those that minister aright be held worthy of double honour and especially those that labour in the word and teaching';<sup>1</sup> because that they are not appointed of the bishops for (payment of) anything at all; wherefore they must needs be honoured with all godly honour. d For when Moses served the altar worthily, God did grant unto his countenance a splendour greater than all.<sup>2</sup> And this did God make for a sign unto them that serve the altar aright in holiness, even as he. For he was the faithful presbyter,<sup>3</sup> who 'laboured in the word and in doctrine' and established the law for that obstinate people and bore their burden g and their weeping and their irreverent murmuring wherewith they murmured against the Lord, and the curses that they uttered against Him.<sup>4</sup> Yet h was not all this a burden unto him because of the beauty of the altar whereof he was the minister and which was an image of the Word.<sup>5</sup> Wherefore he was honoured more than any, in that he tasted of the sweetness of God; he, the first that spake of the Church and gave unto her the form of the tabernacle, that by this fixed design the Church might be called to mind. For the tabernacle which followed him was an image of the Church. And not only did he make it, but he also set therein in order the ordinances of the sacred service, that he might teach us the fear of God that doth surround the altar, albeit we see it not. For he made bells round about the hem of the raiment of Aaron his brother,<sup>6</sup> that, when the chiefs<sup>7</sup>

R f. 94b * at the holy place heard him enter the tabernacle, they might step aside, lest he should die. For every one that shall venture to approach the altar, without observing the law of God, shall die a wretched death, even as the sons of Eli, the priest of the Lord. For none that serveth the altar in impurity or with neglect shall die a good death.

(§ 1). h He saith also unto the priests which draw nigh unto the Lord, that they sanctify themselves, lest the Lord destroy certain of them.<sup>8</sup> For this befell the sons of Aaron<sup>9</sup>, when they sanctified not themselves according to the bidding of their father's brother, to perform their priesthood in the fear of God. For Moses said,<sup>10</sup> 'I fear and tremble, for this is the place wherein the Lord dwelleth', as He said unto Moses, <sup>11</sup> 'I will appear unto thee in this place, between the wings of the cherubim, and will speak with thee'. For a word went forth from His mouth saying, <sup>12</sup> 'No man seeth my face and liveth'. David knoweth this when he saith, <sup>13</sup> 'Dreadful art thou, O God; who can stand before Thee?' And the prophet l David never ventured to draw nigh unto the Lord or, like a priest, to offer sacrifice, albeit he longed so to do, as he saith, <sup>14</sup> 'I love Thy dwellings, O Lord of Hosts, and my soul longeth for the courts of the Lord'. His desire to approach the altar and to be a priest was greater far than (his desire for) the glory of his kingdom. For by no means have all men authority to approach the altar, rather for him only whom the Lord hath chosen for this duty; and he must (then) perform his service in fear and trembling. For David had (himself) seen how Saul, <sup>15</sup> who without right or authority ll made an offering, instead of a blessing, received therefor a curse and fell into great grief. For God took from him his glory when he ventured to approach the sanctuary, being but a layman, and to take upon himself the office * of Samuel, the faithful priest. m For <sup>R f. 95a</sup> this cause did God take from him his kingdom and gave it unto David, because that he revered the altar. He saw also the destruction which God performed upon Uzzah, <sup>16</sup> because Uzzah did without authority put forth his hand and lay hold upon the ark of the covenant of the Lord. For as the calf which bore the ark caused it to lean aside, Uzzah laid hold upon it; wherefore the Lord destroyed him and he died forthwith before the Lord. And when David beheld that, his heart was oppressed <sup>17</sup> and albeit he desired to bring the ark unto his house, yet durst he not, saying, 'How and in what manner should the ark of the Lord enter into my dwelling'? And when Dara<sup>18</sup> received the ark, his state of poverty ceased and he became rich, as it is said,<sup>19</sup> 'The Lord blessed the house of Dara n the Chaldaean,<sup>20</sup> and all that he had, because of the ark of the Lord'. For who shall even draw nigh unto an altar with little fear and be safe? King Uzziah<sup>21</sup> also coveted the outward form<sup>22</sup> of the priesthood, for verily it is a thing to be desired. Yet wherefore do I call to mind a single man, that alone suffered through the Holy Ghost? Did not the most of the sixty myriads which followed Moses die through the Holy Ghost? As the Israelites said unto Moses,<sup>23</sup> 'We are become few and are perished', because that the earth had swallowed up Dathan and Abiram with their men. This befell them because that they had desired the honour of the priesthood. Korah<sup>24</sup> also and his multitude, in all two hundred men, died in wrath before the Lord, as it is written<sup>25</sup>, 'To him that hath shall be given, that he may have abundance; but from him that hath not, the little that he hath shall be taken away'. For God would teach us the fear that belongeth unto the altar and unto all the vessels that are upon the altar. It is said,<sup>26</sup> 'The Lord spoke thus with Moses and Eleazar saying, Take the brazen vessels, which have been brought before the Lord, from the midst of the men that

For the Lord reproveth priests s also, saying, <sup>28</sup> 'They have defiled the Lord's holy place and have turned aside from my law'. And in Ezekiel He saith, as one that is sad at heart because of the princes, <sup>29</sup> 'They build them houses beside the altar, wherein to eat and drink. For they have set their dwellings beside my dwelling and their wall standeth betwixt me and them, that they (sic) with their whoredom may be put far from me'. The wise Paul also doth blame such as these, saying, <sup>30</sup> 'Have ye u no houses wherein ye may eat and drink, that ye should despise the church of God and put them to shame that have not?' And again the holy Gospel saith, <sup>31</sup> 'He made a scourge of cords and cast out all the sellers and buyers, saying, Make not my father's house a house of merchandise', teaching us thereby that God's house is the church and the altar the table of the Lord, as He saith in the prophet w Malachi, <sup>32</sup> 'Woe unto him that saith, The table of the Lord is defiled', as He saith, <sup>33</sup> 'Woe unto you also, ye scribes and Pharisees, because ye say, Whoso shall swear by the temple and altar, it is nothing; but whoso shall swear by the gold of the temple and by the offering which is upon the altar, he is thereby bound'. Now no man may draw nigh unto the temple and the holy altar but those that have sanctified themselves as befits the holy place'. He saith, <sup>34</sup> 'Fear and know that I am God'. For this cause, O priest, it is given unto thee that thou have power over all this. Doth not God require Unto thee are given the first fruits of all, unto thee are given the offerings for the dead and the living and thou dost eat the sins of the people, even as Hosea saith, <sup>35</sup> 'They do eat the people's sins'. May that not befall thee which is said, <sup>36</sup> 'Their souls are seized away through iniquity'. When the priest doth evil, what then shall the people do? <sup>37</sup> The priests are chosen y that they may be more holy than the people and that unto them the offerings may be given, that they may be holy, praying for the people, entreating for their sins, even as Moses saith of them, <sup>38</sup> that they are those whom 'the Lord God hath chosen'. And when the priest shall sin like the people, who than shall pray for them? For a people and priests that are impure, the same have no prayer which goeth up to God for the people, as it is said, <sup>39</sup> 'The Lord heareth not the prayer of the sinner'. For ten times did the wrath of the Lord come upon the people in the desert, that he might root them out. But Moses prayed for them and the Lord turned away His wrath from them and had pity upon the sinful people, for a a just man's sake, because that he had not grieved the heart of God.

Wherefore God hath placed the people under your feet, ye priests, ye great men in God's house, as he saith unto the people,<sup>44</sup> 'Obey your chief men and submit yourselves unto them, i for they it is that pray day and night for your souls'. So (also) is the altar; and be it of wood or stone or gold *or silver, it is no (more) mortal a, as its R f. 99a former substance, but liveth for ever and is spiritual; for the living God standeth thereon. As He testified concerning Moses and Aaron, that they were holy in His b priesthood, and as it is said<sup>81</sup> that bells of gold should be hanged upon the garment of Aaron, that the angels who guard the altar might hear their noise; so now shall the presbyters be holy with all holiness, the more especially because the holy body and life-giving blood hath been distributed unto them. (§ 20). o And the priests shall be nourished from the church, lest they find wherewith to make excuse; for God shall judge them.

concubine,<sup>57</sup> we have found that after his death Moses did save his soul and raise it up from destruction, saying,<sup>58</sup> 'Let Reuben live and not die.' (These words,) 'Let him live and not die' were spoken concerning Reuben because that he, when he died, because of his father's curse was not received into the light neither into the darkness. Neither did God receive him because of his father's curse nor could Satan receive him because of his holy descent; for he was the chief of the twelve tribes of Israel. But God set him under the judgment of the judge that was to come, which is Moses. For when Moses arose, through God became he chief, like as He gave unto Peter to be the chief of the church. And as unto him it was said,<sup>59</sup> 'Whatsoever thou hast R f. 115a bound* on earth shall be bound in heaven and whatsoever thou hast loosed on earth shall be loosed in heaven'; so also did Moses, when he loosed the curse<sup>p</sup> that was on Reuben, whereof there was no forgiveness, because that the latter law was not yet given. And for this did Moses appoint the law, saying,<sup>60</sup> 'Whoso lieth with his father's wife shall die the death.' These things have we said (for a testimony) that the living hath power to save them<sup>s</sup> that are dead from their sins<sup>s</sup>, as Paul the apostle<sup>t</sup> saith,<sup>61</sup> 'If the dead are not raised, wherefore are ye baptized for them?' If they were baptized for the dead for the salvation of their bodies, let them give also because of them, for the salvation of their souls. But haply one will say, 'I am poor. of this rich man which did this, why divided he his riches for his son's sake that was dead? For the death of his son that was dear unto him, was for him as a wise teacher, that he should learn the will of God; and now he gave unto the poor, (whereas) while his son was alive he learned it not, neither gave he thus. Wherefore these things are not thus needful to salvation; for salvation lay not in the multitude of possessions, but in the pious thoughts which he had concerning his son. And thou, if thou art poor and wouldest save the soul of (one) that is dead, have thyself thus pious thoughts and thou shalt save thy soul and the soul of the dead. For forgiveness lieth not in the multitude of riches but rather it is in good deeds. Thou art not able to give unto the poor, but thou art able to be a man of God in the church. For many do minister at the graves of their children in ignorance. If thou be not able to e nourish the poor, yet canst thou e observe the church's sacraments and make petition for thyself and thy son.* If thou lovest him, do this; R f. 115b for the rich man gave all this for his son because he loved him. So do thou offer unto God thy petition for thy son; for in truth thou canst save his soul alive. For God desireth i that thou shouldst be wise more than vessels of gold and silver. If it be but an earthen vessel which thou, according to thy power, dost give, or l even by promise alone l, so shalt thou gain thy soul by the promise which thou hast given, according to thy power, and shalt gain the soul which thou lovest. For God looketh upon the nature (of man) and looketh not upon the multitude of possessions. For the Lord Almighty<sup>62</sup> saith, <sup>63</sup> 'The gold is mine and the silver is mine'. For this did Jehoiada, the wise priest, the chief-priest of Israel.<sup>73</sup> In the days of king Joash he took the ark of the Lord as it were a chest and bored its lid through and sealed it with the king's seal and set it in the temple<sup>74</sup> and therein he laid the things vowed, until it was filled. And when it was full they opened it together and the gold which they found they gave to the carpenters and the builders for the building of the house of God. And this is the thing that befell in those times. And in the time of Hezekiah, the righteous king, and of Isaiah, the prophet, they took all the gold which they found in the treasuries of the house of the Lord and sent it as a present unto the king of Mosul, lest he should come upon them and root them out.<sup>75</sup> And (thus) did they make t a roof t for the people, that the barbarian should not destroy them, and they gave money for them. Yet shall not the alms-giving for the poor be diminished for the reason that 'We will leave something in the treasury of the Lord'. But if in just management aught hath remained over, let it be kept safe on behalf of an old church and let them readily use it to that end. But for the poor shall be taken yet the more thought. ## APPENDIX A.

The Canons of Athanasius are cited in two disciplinary works, both of which are known, in their Ethiopic forms, under the name of Faus Manfasâwî or Medicina Spiritualis. On these the following observations may be made:

I.

One of them, in Arabic الطّب الروحاني The Spiritual Medicine, is due to Michael, bishop of Atrîb and Malîg, the author of that Coptic Synaxarium which Wüstenfeld translated <sup>1</sup>. Its contents have been fully described by Gildemeister <sup>2</sup>. The disposition of the work much resembles that of the Nomocanon of Michael of Damietta <sup>3</sup>, from which however it differs in its use of certain works of canon law. Gildemeister supposed it to be of Melkite authorship; but the evidence adduced relates in reality, not to this work, but to one appended to it in the Bonn MS., <sup>4</sup> and bearing the title: معرفة الأعياد المقدسة التي أمرنا <sup>5</sup>. The statement of the Ethiopic translation, that the author of this Med. Spir. was Michael of Malig, need not be doubted and agrees well with the general character of the work.

<sup>5</sup> I. z. Index of the sacred festivals, ordained us by the holy Apostles for us to celebrate, (drawn up) by Clement, pope of Rome.

I am acquainted with only three MSS. of the Arabic original:

1. That brought by the Catholic theologian, J. M. A. Scholz<sup>1</sup> from Egypt to Bonn and described by Gildemeister.
2. Fragments in the Berlin MS. Diez qu. 107.<sup>2</sup>
3. Perhaps the Vatican MS. mentioned in Assemani, Bibl. Or. I. 630, no. 78.<sup>3</sup> But this may contain the work described below as II.

The Ethiopic version of this work (Faus Manfasâwî) is preserved in Europe in the following MSS.:

4. Cat. Codd. . . Bodl., VII — Codd. Ethiop. (1848), no. XVI, 30 ff.
5. Cat. of Eth. MSS. in Brit. Mus. (Wright, 1877), no. 137, I (Or. 550), p. 93.
6. Ib., no. 138, I (Or. 788).
7. Ib., no. 139, I (Or. 549).
8. Ib., no. 140, I (Or. 789).

The following are the passages from the Athanasian Canons cited in the above work, according to the Arabic text of the Bonn MS.

F. 72b, cap. 14, Concerning pollution — § 9. (Certain learned bishops have said that whoso pollutes himself during the day, until the termination of evening prayer, may not make the offering until the following day, because, according to the ordinances of both Old and New Testaments, the day whereon the pollution took place has by then passed over).

واما القديس اثناسيوس فقال اذا اراد الانسان ان يتقرب فيجب ان يصوم عن هذه اللذة من عشية ليلته الى آخر نهاره حاشية اظنه يعنى بقوله انه اذا تقرب ما يقرب الزوجة بقية النهار والا لو كان قصد الانعزال عن الزوجة هذه المدة قبل القربان لكان قد قل من عشية ليلته الى آخر الليلة عند صباح اليوم الثاني لان عشية النهار ليس فيه قربان ٥

“And as for S. Athanasius, he said,<sup>1</sup> ‘If any man will to communicate, it is needful that he fast from this enjoyment from the evening of that night until the close of the next day’. Note. I think he meaneth by his words that if he have communicated, he shall not approach his wife for the rest of the day. Else, if he had intended abstinence from the wife for this space, before the offering, he would have said, ‘From the evening of that night until the end of the night, at the dawn of the second day’. For at the evening of a day there is no offering”.

And he saith, in the 77th,<sup>3</sup> 'Fear ye the altar and honour it, neither approach thereunto in impudence (lit. little shame), but in purity and carefulness; for the altar is spiritual and is not devoid of soul, and the impure may not approach thereunto until he have purified himself'".

COPTIC TEXT.

That the foregoing Arabic version is, like so many of the Arabic works current in the medieval church of Egypt, derived from a Coptic text was, on a priori grounds, to be presumed. Many features of the Arabic, when compared with the parallel passages in the Coptic, clearly testify to the dependence of the one upon the other. Not a few awkward or obscure phrases in the later are seen to be due to the translator's misunderstanding of the earlier text<sup>1</sup>; and the Arabic further betrays its origin by its adoption of certain Coptic words in their original form and script<sup>2</sup>, besides using, in one instance at least, a Coptic term simply transliterated<sup>3</sup>.

But these imported words would suffice moreover to show us — did not frequent divergences of detail point to the same conclusion — that this Arabic version was not made from the Coptic in its extant form. The Coptic words embedded in the Arabic text all belong to the Bohairic dialect. It may therefore be assumed that, besides the Sa'ïdic text partly preserved to us, a Bohairic adaptation of it, or perhaps — seeing how unmistakably the Arabic often differs from the Sa'ïdic<sup>4</sup> — an independent Bohairic translation from the Greek, was once in existence.

<sup>4</sup> Differences are most noticeable in §§ 40, 46 (end), 50 (end), 52, 73, 78, 79, 93. The Coptic is often curtailed in the Arabic, e.g. §§ 43, 44, 47, 56, 62, 65, 71, 87. Of the significance of the pagination in one of the Coptic fragments we have already spoken (v. Introduction).

The hypothesis of a lost Greek original could be defended simply on the analogy of the numerous Coptic works for which a derivation from Greek sources has been demonstrated. It would also be supported by the multitude of Greek words and phrases scattered through the text; some of them too unusual to be reckoned among the every-day stock of Coptic translators<sup>1</sup>, though in face of the occasional appearance of even the rarest Greek terms in still later and certainly not translated texts<sup>2</sup>, this argument is not without its weakness.

Beyond the MSS. here utilised, no other text of the Athanasian Canons has hitherto been found in Coptic literature<sup>3</sup>. They appear however to occur in the interesting catalogue of the library of a Theban monastery, published by Bouriant<sup>4</sup> and dating probably from about the year 600<sup>5</sup>. Among the biblical works with which the list begins we read, between Genesis and Leviticus: ΕΞΟΔΟΣ ΑΠΗΚΑΝΩΝ ΑΠΑ ΑΘΑΝΑΣΙΟΣ ΧΑΡ[ΤΗΣ], 'Exodus and the Canons of Apa Athanasius — papyrus.'<sup>6</sup> As a later number (53) the same catalogue gives: 'A book of Ordinances (ἐντολή) of Apa Athanasius', which, had it not been for the earlier entry, we might have taken for our canons.

Of the Sa'idic text we have parts of two MSS., which, though differing considerably in age, appear (where comparisons are possible) to represent much the same recension. The older MS. consists now of 23 leaves<sup>7</sup> of a papyrus

book (Brit. Mus. Coptic Papyrus XXXVI here called B), and of 4 still smaller fragments in the Phillipps collection at Cheltenham (here P).<sup>1</sup> All are imperfect. A complete leaf measured about  $28 \text{ to } 30 \times 21\frac{1}{2}$  cm. In B the fibres on the rectos run horizontally to the text in the first 8 leaves, vertically in the next 10. Then follow 2 (XVI, XXII) where they are horizontal, while the last 2 (XVIIb, XXI) show again vertical fibres on the rectos. The original arrangement of quires is therefore not easy to discern<sup>2</sup>. One may have begun with the 9th leaf (VII).

The text is in a single column of some 24—26 lines, written in a heavy uncial script, probably of about the year 600 (v. plate)<sup>3</sup>. Initials are not enlarged, but a few paragraphs are indicated in the margin by a ζ-like mark (II, IV, X, XV) or by a horizontal stroke (XI, XIV, XXI). The former of these signs occurs, where preserved, at points coinciding with sections in the Arabic version; the latter usually does not. Of course the majority of the sections in that version are due to its translator (v. Riedel's Introduction). The papyrus was, when purchased by the British Museum, stated to have come from 'Thebes'<sup>4</sup>. Its language is a pure Sa'idic, such as might be expected from that neighbourhood.

The other MS. contributes 7 leaves: 3 now in Naples and partly published by Zoega<sup>5</sup> (here called N) and 4 in the Rainer collection at Vienna<sup>6</sup> (here V), unpublished and most kindly communicated to me by Prof. Krall, who had also the goodness to revise his copy in certain obscure places.

XVI, XVII. The MS. is no. 167 in my forthcoming catalogue. Further study has rectified several details in the description there given.

This MS. is of parchment. The leaves are complete and measure about  $35 \times 28$  cm. The text is in two columns, of 34—36 lines each and the script identical with that of Zoega's Classis V, no. XX. Cf. also Ciasca, Sacr. Bibl. Fragm., Tab. XIII. Initials, stops &c. are coloured red, the small bud-ornament beside the larger initials, red and green. The MS. can therefore be dated about the years 950—1000<sup>1</sup> and came doubtless from the library of Shenoute's monastery (the White Monastery). Its language is naturally somewhat less classic than that of the older MS.; but its divergences, mostly orthographic, are in keeping with the usage of scribes of this later period<sup>2</sup>. The portions of our text preserved here show no division into sections; the numerous enlarged initials<sup>3</sup> indicate, as is usual in such MSS., merely new sentences.

The hand which wrote the MS. NV is to be recognized in several other leaves among those brought from the White Monastery. It seems not improbable that of these a certain number belonged to the same volume with our Canons<sup>4</sup>; for they show parts of the so-called Ecclesiastical Canons, which may well have been placed beside those of Athanasius. The leaves in question are: (1) Brit. Mus. Or. 3580 B. 2, a fragment<sup>5</sup>, = Can. Eccl. 32—34, (2) Paris MS. copte 131<sup>3</sup>, f. 26, pp. 35, 36 = Can. Eccl. 62, (3) Ib. 129<sup>12</sup>, f. 7 + 130<sup>3</sup>, ff. 50—54, pp. 59—70 = Can. Eccl. 72—78, the last of which

If the Eccl. Canons be reckoned to have extended in this volume to p. 79<sup>2</sup>, then some 47 out of the 62 pp. thus missing before p. 141 (the first of those here published) would be occupied by the lost part of our Canons<sup>3</sup>; that is to say, these would have begun about p. 94. Some 15 pages therefore (79 to 94) would still remain to be accounted for. This gap the Apostolic Canons would adequately fill.

The texts are here printed with all visible diacritical marks<sup>4</sup>: the papyrus (BP) in columns as in the original, the parchment MS. (NV) in continuous lines. The sections of the Arabic version are added for convenience in the margins. Lacunae and completions of lacunae are indicated by square brackets, doubtful letters by dots below them, estimates of the number of letters missing occasionally by a corresponding number of dots.

<sup>1</sup> In Texte u. Unt., NF. XI, 1b, p. 37 ff. I here add a fol. (pp. 59, 60) to Leipoldt's fragment. This volume therefore contained, like Or. 1320 (Lagarde's), the whole of the Eccl. Canons; and the two MSS. are practically contemporary.

(§ 41). No one that is reckoned of the church (ἐκκλ.) shall go unto the fortune-tellers nor (οὐδέ) sorcerers nor (οὐδέ) wizards nor (οὐδέ) magicians (μάγος). But (δέ) if he shall [be found] to have gone [and he be] testified against of three witnesses, he shall be put forth and shall not be communicated (συνάγω) three years, while he stay (?) doing penance (μετανοέω) bitterly for that he hath done. Thereafter he shall be brought (again) into his order (τάξις), according to the measure of (κατά) his penance (μετ.). But (δέ) if he do not penance (μετ.), he shall die without the congregation (ἀποσυνάγωγος).

(§ 42). No cleric (κληρικός) shall take up with <sup>1</sup> a woman that is not his (wife). But (δέ) if fornication (πορνεία) be found against any or (ἢ) adultery, he shall pass a year without, till he do penance (μετανοέω). And (δέ) if his penance (μετ.) be evident in this full year, <sup>2</sup> he shall come (again) into his order (τάξις). <sup>3</sup> But (δέ) if he do not penance (μετανοέω) but (ἀλλά) remain in his sin, he shall be deposed (καθαίρεω).

(§ 43). If the wife of a deacon (διάκονος) die, he shall remain continent (ἐγκρατής). If he be youthful (νεώτερος) and contain (ἐγκρατεύω) not himself, but (ἀλλά) take (a wife), he shall (p. 142) pass six months without. But (δέ) if they shall admit him * within, through the mercies of God, he shall go to the rank (ῥῥδινον) of the lowest (lit. small) deacon (διάκ.) and be the last, until he advance (προκόπτω) again. If a subdeacon (ὑποδιάκ.) marry, they shall not make merry at his festival (πομπή), neither (οὐδέ) shall they clap (hands) nor (οὐδέ) sing as do the heathen (ἐθνικός). ourable, envied of all men, and that God's name may be thereby glorified.

(§ 44). No one that is reckoned of the clergy (κληρος) shall suffer (ἀνέχω) his wife to adorn (κοσμέω) herself with gold or (ῥ) silver or (ῥ) with precious stones (ῥ) or with antimony or (ῥ) with curls or braids (of hair) or (ῥ) with costly raiment; for (γάρ) lo, guise (σχῆμα) of this sort is not that of the children of the church (ἐκκλ.). For (γάρ) the apostle (ἀπόστ.) Peter forbiddeth (παραιτέομαι) such things as these, as being a guise (σχῆμα) of fornication (πορνικός).<sup>1</sup> And not only (οὐ μόνον δέ) these, but (ἀλλά) Paul also, the apostle (ἀπ.), writeth, making them unclean before all the laity (λαϊκός).<sup>2</sup> Lo, by how much the more (πόσῳ μᾶλλον) we priests? For (γάρ) the priest's wife doth eat of the bread of the altar (θυσιαστ.); wherefore she also must needs [walk] in holy guise (σχῆμα), that her condition(?)<sup>3</sup> may be for a rule unto others, without *accusation, while they behold your good and holy manner of (p. 143) life (ἀναστροφή) with reverence (lit. fear).<sup>4</sup> But (δέ) if any shall say regarding these commandments (ἐντολή) that they be commandments (ἐντ.) of man, let him know that they are commandments of God which I write unto you. Jacob the patriarch (πατρ.) was not careless (ἀμελέω) neither suffered he (ἀνέχω) his wives to adorn (κοσμέω) themselves, nor (οὐδὲ) even his servants; but (ἀλλά) he took the earrings of gold and the bracelets (ψέλλιον) of his wives and his daughters and destroyed them and hid them beneath the terebinth (τερέμινθος) which is in the town (πόλις) of Sigima, until this day.<sup>5</sup> And Moses likewise also forbade (παραιτ.) this manner of guise (σχῆμα). He said unto the people (λαός), 'Take from off you these ornaments (κόσμος) and your glorious apparel (στολή) and I will show thee what things I will do unto thee.'<sup>6</sup> And (δέ) this he said showing us that they are not able to learn of God if they give themselves unto adorning (κοσμέω) of their faces and their heads. So dost thou now know, O cleric (κληρικός), that these be the teachings of God; despise (καταφρονέω) them not. For (γάρ) if Peter would none of such worldly things (κοσμικός), Paul despised them, Moses contemned (καταφρ.) them, Jacob did break them, scattering them abroad and mixing them with the earth, neither do thou (p. 144) oppose these holy men, for (γάρ) these are the head (sic) of the church (ἐκκλ.); that thou mayest become a beloved son.

(§ 45). No cleric (κληρικός) shall cast forth his wife without cause <sup>1</sup> of adultery (πορνεία). If any shall cast forth his wife and dwell with another, especially (μάλιστα) if he leave children with her, he shall be deposed (καθαιρέω).

(§ 46). No cleric (κληρ.) shall be go-between (μεσιτεύω or μεσάζω <sup>2</sup>) in any matter of marriage(γάμος)-dividing at all. But (δέ) if one be found to have divided or mediated (μεσιτεύω or μεσάζω) in any matter of divorce (ῥεπούδιον), he shall be cast forth from the clergy (κλήρος) and that marriage (γάμ.) shall be joined together again. No cleric (κληρ.) shall mediate (ut supra) in any public (δημόσιος) matter, <sup>3</sup> according as (κατά) we did first say, neither (οὐδέ) shall they serve (ὑποτάσσω) any man, but (ἀλλά) they shall remain free (ἐλεύθερος), that they may serve the holy altar (θυσιαστ.) with holy readiness.

(§ 47). No cleric (κληρ.) shall neglect (ἀμελέω) the sick in his street, to visit them, but (ἀλλά) he shall make enquiry for them in godly charity (ἀγάπη). If (+ μέν) it be a poor man, he shall give him that whereof he hath need (χρεία). But (δέ) the sons of Sadok strayed (πλανάω) not. They it is shall draw nigh unto me at my table (τράπεζα) and serve me and keep my ordinances. And they shall have girdles of cloth, bound about their hips (reaching) to below their loins'.<sup>2</sup> Even as (κατά) He saith unto Moses, 'Thou shalt not go up upon my altar (θυσ.) by steps, lest thou discover thy nakedness (ἀσχημοσύνη) thereon'.<sup>3</sup> Knowest thou then, O cleric (κληρ.), who it is standeth upon the table (τράπεζα)? Four leaves (pp.  $\overline{\Lambda\gamma}$ — $\overline{\Lambda\delta}$ ), now in Oxford (MS. Clarendon Press, Woide's Sa'idic fragments no. 39), of a finely written volume,<sup>1</sup> show a homiletic text<sup>2</sup> with striking resemblances to the Athanasian Canons and I therefore give a translation of the passage in question, merely summarizing the remainder.

[The praise of charity (quotations: 1 Cor. XIII. 1, 1 Pet. IV. 8, Ja. V. 20, ib. II. 13, Hebr. XII. 14). Exhortation to flee from sin (quot.: Is. I. 14, 15, Ps. Let all hear the scripture and repent: man, woman, old, young, priest, monk, rich, poor; but first of all, the priests.]

'Let them keep themselves holy, according as it is written in the law and the prophets, that they should keep themselves from all fornication (πορνεία) and from all things impure (ἀκάθαρτος), and that no vain (ἄργός) word proceed from their tongues and mouths. Neither let them swear any oath beyond the Lord's command, neither (utter) a lie nor mockery in carelessness or jesting (σκώπτω) or in sport, nor shameless words, lest their hearers hate them and say: See, the priests are wanton (σπαταλῶ) and jest with men. any vain (ἀργός) words with their mouths, lest they become a stumbling-block unto any man and lest men be offended at them. Those that go in unto the house of God must give glory to God, and men must give glory to them. Let them keep themselves from all error (πλάνη), lest God be wroth (p. 41) with them and destroy them like the sons of Eli, upon the altar (θυσ.), because of this sins and wickedness (-ἀσεβείας) which they have committed before Him in His house. Is it not written: The priests which draw nigh unto God, let them purify themselves, lest the Lord destroy certain of them? <sup>1</sup> If He spared not those for the sake of their righteous (δίκαιος) fathers, with whom He oftentimes did talk face to face, shall He then spare a guileful and impure (ἀκάθ.) and erring (πλάνος), wicked priest in His house, and not blot him (lit. them) out? Wherefore no priest shall do aught that is dissolute (bôl ebol), that no man may find cause against them in their houses or in the church; but they must be seen in good words and your father which is in heaven be glorified. <sup>2</sup> No priest shall sport with any woman, whether girl or grown woman, lest he become an offence (σκάνδαλον) unto any man among the people; for it is written: Woe unto the man through whom the offence cometh. <sup>3</sup> No presbyter (πρεσβ.) shall mix himself in any matter <sup>4</sup> nor shall he anoint a woman with oil with his hands, lest he become (p. 42) an occasion (ἀφορμή) unto men; <sup>5</sup> for it is written: Thou shalt turn away <sup>6</sup> hence, lest any one set a stain upon thee. <sup>7</sup> For the heart of man is inclined unto wickedness from his youth. <sup>8</sup> But let him pray only over the oil and let them pour it out for them (sc. the women); thereafter let them (sc. the priests) sign (σφραγίζω) it and give it to

No presbyter shall drink wine till he is drunken; and neither, if they drink, shall they go in and out in the village or in the street, lest they defile the name of God through their shamelessness. Neither shall they drink while yet the sun is out, lest they become for a stumbling-block unto such as pass by (παράγω) and behold them and say: Behold and see these that be drunken with the offerings (προσφορά) of the poor. They did change their nature (φύσις) and denied (ἀρνᾶω) God who created them and worshipped the likeness of a beast and named it God, displaying their impurity; for they (that did) thus were priests of the people. No priest shall do violence unto any man, neither shall they keep two weights in their houses, a small and a great; but every righteous thing (δικαιοσύνη) shall be theirs, for it is unto them that the people pay heed in all things. quoted or referred to

(a) IN THE ARABIC TEXT.

We do not think that the bible text implied by these Arabic quotations would at present repay investigation. Moreover, only half of the passages registered are really quoted; the rest are merely referred to. From the quotations in the Coptic version it is clear that the Arabic — frequently, if not always — was translated thence directly, apparently without appeal to an independent bible MS.

(b) IN THE COPTIC TEXT.

Of the texts occurring in the Coptic fragments, somewhat more than half may be called quotations; yet the manner in which several even of these diverge from all other versions, leaves it doubtful whether they should be so regarded. It must be remembered that not all of the incidental texts are elsewhere extant in Sa'idic or available for comparison. Among the passages here registered, some have additional words (1 Chr. XXIX. 14, Ps. XXIV. 1, CXII. 3, Lu. XII. 45, 1 Pet. III. 2), others show an unusual sequence in the clauses (Ex. XXXIII. 5, Lu. XII. 20), while others use different gender or number in the pronouns (Ps. CXXXII. 9, Joh. XX. 23, 2 Cor. VIII. 14). In Joh. XIII. 29 the Sa'idic bible (Balestri, Maspero Et. I. 290) supports the reading δῶ for δῶ. The peculiar ending of Lu. XII. 20 was accepted by the Arabic translator, as was the addition ib. 45 and the readings of 1 Chr. XXIX. 14, 1 Cor. IX. 13, Heb. X. 26. In 1 Cor. IX. 13, the verb hise is supported by Lagarde, Aeg. 245, though ib. 223, 247 agree with Woide and Balestri. 'God' for 'man' in Mat. IX. 6 is doubtless an error.
